On Friday, April 6th, 1917 the front line radio announced new deaths, including that of Prince Frederick Karl, nephew of Kaiser William and winner of a bronze medal in show jumping at the 1912 Olympics. On Friday, April 6th, 1917 Lenin was preparing the Russian Revolution. On Friday, April 6th, 1917 the United States entered the war. But, above all, on Friday, April 6th, 1917, eleven women, employees at the Doyle & Walker Ammunition company, were starting to run behind a ball during their lunch break.
Women's football was born in England at the time of WWI. Teams formed by the female workers of textile and ammunition factories became legendary, rapidly winning the attention and affection of the public and provoking hostile reactions on the part of football's masculine institutions. After the war, many of these teams were forced by law to disband, following several years of incredible success. This is the story of one of these teams.
